Inflection Points

How you can help us grow

August 2025

Since we've launched, many people have reached out to us asking: how can we help make Inflection Points a success?

We held back from answering too quickly, because we wanted to be clear about the kinds of involvement that would strengthen, rather than complicate, our lean model. In light of this, we've considered ways you can get involved with Inflection Points that'd best help us advance our theory of change. We'd most value five things from you.

1. Engage deeply with the articles which we publish
Our primary aim is to get smart people thinking about new ideas for Australian reform. The best way you can advance our mission is to do just that: read the ideas we promote. To ensure you're across the latest content, subscribe to our newsletter on Substack, where we'll let you know when new editions have been released.

2. Pitch articles that we should commission or that you could write
We are always open for articles. A guide of how to pitch to us is included on our website. If you have an idea you think should be written (even if by someone else), let us know.

3. Thoughtfully introduce us to or share our content with people you know well
Reform happens when ideas spread. You can support us by introducing us to policymakers and thinkers we should be in conversation with, and by sharing our essays directly with those in your networks who might act on them.

4. Give us ideas about things we could be doing differently (and how you could help)
We are a lean team. If you think there's something we're doing wrong, let us know. If you think there's something we could do even better (ideally in an area where you are skilled), please also let us know. We are especially interested in people who can volunteer their talents to us where they have a comparative advantage in a specific field.

5. Be part of our community through events and discussions
We also run a Friends of Inflection Points chat, where we (and members of our community) share interesting articles, perspectives and underbaked ideas they have. You can request to join this group here. We occasionally run small events across Australia, which we'll promote in the group chat and through our newsletter.
